PREFACE.

It is a common remark that the dictionary of a foreign language is sure to contain everything except the particular information that one really wants. The aim of the compiler of the present work has been, as far as possible, to avoid those errors which to a certain extent justify this criticism, and to furnish the young student with a handy volume which shall be found, in every respect, of practical utility. For this purpose, not only has each word been carefully translated or explained, but a collection of idioms, proverbs, and quotations given, which is larger and more varied than that to be found in perhaps any other German-English dictionary. A word in one language seldom answers entirely to any single word in another, so that what are called synonyms are really only approximately such; the necessity, therefore, of adding illustrations for the complete understanding of most foreign words is obvious, and no pains have been spared to render the idioms and other phrases given in this work practically useful, and thoroughly illustrative of the points in the two languages in which they differ from one another.

The explanations and English synonyms which accompany each group of German synonyms in the English-German part will, it is hoped, afford great assistance to the learner, and considerably lighten the task of the teacher. Our English-German dictionaries, being for the most part compiled by Germans, have not provided for the difficulty which the English student feels when called on to select from some dozen German words the special one which answers to the sense in which the English word is to be used. The arrangement adopted here, while very simple, will be found to obviate this difficulty.

The well-known dictionaries of Lucas, Flügel, Hilpert, and Köhler, form the basis of the work; but these have been modified by constant reference to the "Deutsches Wörterbuch" of Daniel Sanders, to that begun by the brothers Grimm, and to Meyer's "Konversations Lexikon." Acknowledgments are also due to the admirable "Encyclopaedisches Wörterbuch," compiled by Dr. Karl Sachs and Mons. Villate, and published by Prof. Langenscheidt, of Berlin.

Moreover, the second or English-German division of the book being chiefly written in Germany, the compiler has received much valuable assistance from a number of intelligent German friends. Owing to their kind co-operation many technical expressions have been added, as well as many valuable idioms which, though of common occurrence in every-day life, are not generally found in dictionaries. The volume, too, has been carefully read by an able German scholar.

In the chapter on pronunciation, which it is hoped may prove of special value to the self-taught student, Professor Nagel's little treatise "On the Pronunciation of the German Language" has been constantly referred to, though more recent authorities have also been consulted.

EXPLANATION OF METHOD.

Grouping of Words into Articles. WORDS etymologically related and having an initial syllable or syllables in common are grouped under this initial syllable or syllables. The completion of each word, the suffixes and second components, being printed in full-faced type, readily catch the eye, thus obviating any difficulty which the breaking up of the words might otherwise present. Words formed by terminations—derivative words—come first in each group in alphabetical order, the compounds following in the same order, but separated from them by the abbreviation Comp. (for Compound).* No attempt has been made to distinguish between primary derivatives (such as Kunſt, Blume, Fehler, Himmel) and secondary (as trinkbar, Spicier, lieblich), such distinctions being deemed beyond the province of a work like the present.

Type. In the first or German-English division, synonyms and definitions are printed in Italics, all explanations and abbreviations in Roman characters. In the second or English-German part of the work this method is reversed, synonyms and definitions being in Roman type, explanations, etc., in Italics. In this part, too, adverbs and prepositions which, when used with a verb, give rise to idiomatic phrases, are printed in full-faced type, and can at once be seen by the eye merely glancing at the article. See also Grouping of Words.

Use of Brackets. When a prefix, suffix, or component of a word is enclosed in brackets it is to be understood as signifying that the unbracketed word is a synonym by itself, and when taken with the bracketed word or syllable forms another synonym, which may be used in the same sense as that in which the unbracketed word is used: thus, (Blut-)Ader signifies that Ader and Blutader are both equivalents in a certain sense of the English word "vein"; in the same way, (ein)tauchen, to dip; (er)läßlich, venial; electric(al), elektriſch; crook(ed)-backed, buckelig, etc. etc. But if a word or phrase enclosed in brackets in one language be followed by a word or phrase enclosed in brackets in the other language, the contents of the one bracket are to be understood as translating the contents of the other: for example, to do good (evil), Gutes (Böſes) thun, where Böſes is the translation of the bracketed "evil," and the phrase Böſes thun of the phrase to do evil. When a German word or words enclosed in brackets is followed by no bracketed word or words in English, the contents of the bracket are for the purpose of showing the case required by the German verb it accompanies, or for some other grammatical purpose: thus, when to court is to be rendered by (einer Perſon) den Hof machen, (einer Perſon) is inserted for the purpose of informing the student that, although the English verb governs the accusative case, the German requires the dative; in the same way, to court is further defined as ſich (um etwas) bewerben, in order to exhibit the fact that in this sense of court the German equivalent is followed by the accusative with um. In the German-English division, (einem etwas) is employed as a short way of saying that the verb to which it is joined governs the dative of the person and the accusative of the thing. Moreover, in the second part of the work, when the adverb is formed from the adjective by the addition of ly to the latter, this ly is enclosed in brackets, and the bracketed abbreviation (adv.) which follows is to be understood as referring to it.

Punctuation. When several synonyms are given, all answering to one sense of a word, they are separated by commas, whilst those representing different senses are separated by semicolons: thus, Fall, decay, ruin, downfall; case (Gram.); decay, ruin, downfall, being all synonyms of Fall in one sense, are only separated from one another by commas, but they are separated from case, which represents a wholly different sense, by a semicolon. A phrase, on the other hand, even when exhibited in wholly different senses, has the different renderings divided only by commas; before each new sense, however, in the English-German part an explanatory word or phrase is inserted in brackets: as, to break down, im abnehmen sein (as, one's health), durchfallen (at an examination), umwerfen (as, a carriage); or, to come round, (recover) sich erholen, (change one's opinion) schwenken, sich bedenken, sich anders besinnen, (return as an anniversary) wiederkehren, (return as a term) fällig werden, (change as the wind) sich drehen, etc.

English Synonyms, or Explanations of German Words. In Part II., or the English-German division of the work, every new sense in which a word is taken is either preceded by an English synonym* bracketed in Italics, as, to doom (sentence) verurtheilen; (destine) bestimmen; or followed by some explanatory word or phrase which, when a completion of the idea of the preceding word, is bracketed in Roman type, as, to do, erweisen (kindness); when not a completion, in Italics, as, to drivel, geifern (as infants); in place of a synonym, a word is occasionally preceded by an explanatory clause in Italics, as, to drink (of beasts) saufen; which denotes that drink, when expressing the action of a beast, is translated by saufen and not by trinken, which is the word employed in the case of human beings.†

Gender of German Nouns shown by accompanying Article or Adjective. The gender of German substantives in this part, too, is shown by the accompanying article der, die, das; but when an adjective is given with the substantive the article is usually omitted and the gender shown by the termination of the adjective, as, dry measure, trockenes Maß; dry cough, trockener Husten.

The term Particle. The term part. (for particle) has been employed throughout to denote a class of words—so numerous in the German language—which, while possessing a certain force, have no precise syntactical relation to the other words in a sentence. This is the only particular in which the ordinary terminology of English grammarians has been departed from.

Similarly spelt Words are numbered. Words differing in meaning and origin, but spelt alike, are numbered, so that no difficulty can arise owing to their separation for etymological reasons under different heads.

For an explanation of abbreviations, see Abbreviations.

* These words are, of course, only approximately synonymous.

† It is, of course, to be understood that where a synonym of, say, an adjective is explained, the substantive, etc., corresponding to this adjective, and included in the same article, when rendered by the substantive, etc., corresponding to the adjectival synonym, is not in general separately explained: as, Pleasant, adj., freundlich (as a room); (lively) munter, etc.; -ness, s., die Freundlichkeit; die Munterkeit.

GENERAL RULES FOR THE PRONUNCIATION OF THE GERMAN LANGUAGE.

Every syllable is pronounced in German, and, with the exceptions mentioned below, every letter of a syllable, its initial and final consonants being articulated with special clearness even where the syllable begun or closed is unaccented and to be uttered rapidly. The final syllable en alone admits of being somewhat slurred or indistinctly pronounced. The difference between the German and English elementary sounds is explained below: taking this difference into account, pronounce each syllable as in English.

Great care ought to be taken that the stress of the voice may fall upon the proper syllable in German words, as the intelligibility of the language in a great measure depends upon this.

Of Vowels.

Vowels are either long or short.

Long Vowels.

A vowel is long [1] when not followed by any consonant (as bā*);* [2] when followed by only one consonant in the same syllable (as haben, trāgbar*);* [3] when preceding a silent h belonging to the same syllable (as Mahn, Wehr, mahnen*);* [4] when doubled (as Seele, Meer*).*

*Excep. I. Some monosyllabic words — indeclinable and other pronouns, adverbs and particles expressing syntactical relation (prepositions and conjunctions) — form an exception to* [2]; such are es, das, des, was, man, in, an, von, um, mit, bis, ab, ob, weg.

Excep. II. Similarly, many monosyllabic prefixes and all unaccented suffixes and inflectional terminations, though followed by no consonant or by only one in the same syllable, have the vowel sound short, as be, ge, er, ver, zer, el, em, en, chen ꝛc.

Short Vowels.

A Vowel is short [1] when followed by a double consonant (as bb, tt, ck, in Mibber, Mutter, leck*);* [2] when followed by two or more different consonants (as nb, rb, ft, in Land, Marber, Gunft*).*

Excep. I. When two consonants are brought together after a vowel by the elision of another vowel (as habt for habet, sagst for sagest*) the vowel remains* long.

Excep. II. Before ch, sch and z the vowels, though generally short, are in some cases long.

Excep. III. The vowel is also long in a number of words when it precedes two consonants, of which one is a liquid or sibillant, as well as in a few other exceptional instances; such are

die Art	das Pferd
der Barsch	der Probst
der Bart	der Quarz
der Bors	das Schwert
die Erde	stets
die Gebart	todt
das Harz	der Trost
der Harz (Geog.)	der Vogt
der Herd	die Warze
die Herde	werden
hochst	wert(h)
der Krebs	die Wust
die Magd	wust
nachst	der Wustling
nebst	osterlich
das Obst	die Ostern
der Papst	zart.

Of the Vowel sounds.

a long sounds like the English a in ah! or the French a in mâle.
a short " " " " a in madder; it is the same sound in quality as a long only shortened.
aa is the same as a long.
ä long " " " " a in dare, the French è in père or = e long.

[A few words of Latin origin end in German in tät and this ä sounds like the English a in name*/.*
ä short sounds like the English e in get or wrest.
e when long is generally like the English a in mate, pate, fate; but in some words, such as leben, geben, Besen, Frevel, Schwefel the e sound, though long, is open, somewhat resembling the a in share, care, hare.
e short sounds like the English e in get, letter; but before l or r or the double liquid of a monosyllable (as in schnell, denn, wenn*) it resembles the English* e in bell. In all monosyllabic prefixes and unaccented suffixes of derivation or inflection the e is nearly equal to the short i in the word English and resembles the e in deny*; as the final letter of a word it is very weak and short*; the final syllable* en is exactly like the en in the English words sudden, ridden.
ee sounds like the long, close, single e, which is represented in English by the a of mate. But when two e's meet belonging to two different syllables each must be separately pronounced.
e after i is mute, and only serves to lengthen the sound of i when the syllable containing the ie is accented; in words borrowed from foreign languages where this syllable is unaccented the e is pronounced separately, short and weak as in Familī-ĕ.
i long sounds like the English ee in feet, keep.
i short " " " " i in mint, wit bitter.
ie is in sound exactly like i long*; see* e after i.
o long sounds like the English o in tone, note.
o short " " " " in not.
oo is sounded exactly like o long.
ö long sounds like the French œu in vœu*; it has no exact equivalent in English and is produced by forming the lips as if to pronounce* o long and really pronouncing the long e.
ö short sounds like the French œu in œuf, the o

* English people often pronounce this e incorrectly, such words as habē, liebē sounding with them almost habbey, liebey sound being heard more distinctly than in ö long; the sound partakes of the e sound in the English word mercy and the u sound in the English word murder.

u long sounds like the English oo in fool.
u short „ „ „ „ u in full.
ü long „ „ „ French u in für; produce it by forming the lips as if to pronounce double o in wool, yet in the mouth utter the ee sound of eel; with some Germans this ü exactly equals the ie in the English word mien, but this is a vulgar pronunciation; the double o sound ought to be distinctly heard.
ü short is much like the long ü pronounced quickly; it resembles the French u in fusse.
y sounds like the German i long. It is not common, except in words of Greek origin, though some writers use it in order to distinguish words having the same sound but different significations (as kein, his; sein, to be) y is never used in German as equivalent to the English y in year.

Of Diphthongs.

Diphthongs are always long.

[The „umlaut" mark (¨) was originally e.]

ae has the sound of ä long.
ai „ „ „ „ the English i in wise.
au „ „ „ „ „ „ ou in our.
äu „ „ „ „ „ „ oy in boy.
ei
ey „ „ „ „ „ „ i in might.
eu „ „ „ „ äu.
oi „ „ „ „ oi in English.
ui „ „ „ „ wee in English.

Of Consonants.

NB. As a general rule the German language has no silent letters, the only exception to this rule being the letter h which in certain cases, mentioned below, is mute.

b has the sound of the English b except at the close of a word or of a syllable followed by another consonant, when it assumes more of the sound of p; if, however, in closing a syllable it precedes a syllable of inflection (as in liebst), the softer sound is retained. In the double b, the sound of both b's is soft.
c in genuine German words is not used by itself, k or z being employed instead. Before ä, e, i, ö and ü it has the sound of z (English ts*); before the other vowels and consonants it sounds like the English* k. When c closes a syllable and is followed by another beginning with c, the final c is pronounced like k, the initial c of the next syllable having its pronunciation regulated by the letter following it, according to the rules just given (as Accord which is pronounced like Akkord, and accisbar which sounds like aktzisbar. For the pronunciation of ch see h.
d is more truly dental than in English; having a sound at the beginning of words and syllables between the d of do and the th of thee; at the close of a word or syllable, when not preceding a syllable of inflection, this sound is harder and approaches the sound of t. In double b each b has the soft sound, but only in the second or that which commences a syllable is the th sound heard; bt is like the English t.
f single or double, and in all positions has the sound of the English f.
g at the beginning of a syllable is like the English g in gold, good; when it stands at the end of a word or syllable and is preceded by a, o, u or au, its sound is much like gh in the Irish word lough; preceded by e, i, ä, ö, ü, ei, eu or äu, it approaches the sound of the y in yes; this latter sound it also takes after the liquids r and l. North Germans, however, generally retain the hard sound of g (like g in good*) throughout all these cases, except in the unaccented syllable* ig of such words as heilig, gütig ɔc. When a word ending in g is increased by inflection the sound of g is a little softer, but resembles the g of gold, good etc. Preceded by n, g has the hard, initial sound somewhat like the English g in finger (as lang, Ring, jung*); when, however, the word is increased by inflection the* n and g melt into one another as in the ng of the English singer, ringer, bringer (as länger, Ringe, jünger*). [This, of course, does not apply to cases in which the* n and g belong to different syllables as un-gleich, un=gern where each letter has its own individual sound.]
In words adopted from the French the g is pronounced as in French somewhat like the sh in the word English, only deeper as if it were zh (as geni(e)ren, Genie*).*
h at the beginning of words is strongly aspirated like the English h in hound; *between two vowels the aspiration is weak. As the final letter of a word (Stroh), also when preceded by a vowel and followed by a consonant it is perfectly mute; in both these cases it indicates that the preceding vowel is* long (as Mahd, Lohn*).*
th is merely t lengthened, see under t.
ch initial sounds like the English k; in words of German origin, however, it only occurs as such in the words Charfreitag and Charwoche. In words of foreign origin ch initial is pronounced as in chemisch (Chemiker, China); ch final or in the middle of a word resembles [1] (after a, o, u and au*) the sound of* ch in the Scotch word loch and [2] (after e, i, ä, ö, ü, äu, eu or a consonant) its sound approaches more nearly to that of h or to the Scotch pronunciation of gh in night, light etc. (nicht, licht); this is the sound of the ch in the syllable of diminution chen. ch is pronounced like k before s or t provided the s or t form part of the stem, thus in Wachsen, Ochs, Ochsen ɔc., the chs or cht is equal to x in wax, fox etc. But ch before the initial s of another syllable, where the s does not form part of the stem, retains the guttural sound like ch final or ch in the middle of a word (as wach=sam, Nach=sicht, Bach's for Baches*).*
In words of Greek origin, where it occurs as an initial, it has the sound of k before a, o, u or a consonant, but before i or e, (see above Chemiker ɔc.) a softer sound nearly like the y of young preceded by an aspirate (as hyoung*). In words adopted from the French* ch is pronounced like the French ch or the English sh as Charlotte, Chikane, Chef, Chaussee (charlotte, shikane, shef etc.).
j has the sound of the English y in year, yes.
k „ „ „ „ „ „ k in kiss. It is never mute before n as in the English know, but sounds as if followed by a short e; nk is like the English nk in thank, think, where both letters belong to the same syllable; where k is the initial of another syllable, each letter must have its original simple sound; instead of kk, ck is generally used.
l has the same sound as in the English lily, never like the mute l in chalk, walk etc.
m & n are the same as in English; for the sound of ng see g.
p & pp have the same sound as in English; ph has the sound of f or of ph in the English word sophistry (as Ephen*); when* p is joined with f or s as in Pferd, Pfingsten, Psalm the p and f or s must each be heard separately.
q is always followed by u and resembles kw in sound (as quälen which is nearly = kwellen*).*
r is pronounced like the English r in rugged, round, but with greater force and roughness; in combination with h the h is mute (as der Rhein = Rine).

ſ has the soft sound of the English s in rose, bosom at the beginning of a word or syllable or between two vowels (ſage, leſen); at the end of a word or syllable it has the sharp, hissing sound of s in this, such, simple (auß, laſ).

ß & ſſ are pronounced like the English double s in hiss, miss, fuss; ſſ is used only after a short vowel; ß after a long vowel or diphthong. At the end of a word, however, and before all consonants ß must be used for ſſ even where the preceding vowel is short.

ſc has the sound of sk in skate or sc in scorpion before a, o, u or a consonant; before ä, e, i, ö, ü, eu it is equal to sts (as Scipio = Stsipio); z is now generally used instead of ſc in such cases.

ſch has the sound of the English sh in shut, short; when ſ final concludes one syllable and ch begins the next (as in Röſ-chen, Häuſ-chen) ſ and ch must be pronounced separately. The ſch of words borrowed, from the Latin or Greek languages is equal to sk (as Schema, Scholiaſt = skaima, skoliast).

ſt, ſp are pronounced in the middle or at the end of a word like the st, sp in lest, lisp; at the beginning of a word, however, this combination is in some parts of Germany equal to sht, shp (as Stunde, ſprechen often = Shtunde, shprechen).

t, though more truly a dental, has the sound of the English t in true, touch, wet; in foreign words, the t before i, when the i is followed by another vowel, and the ti of unaccented syllables sounds like ts (as Portion = Portsion); but when the accent rests upon the syllable ti (as Partie), t sounds as in English.

th has the simple sound of t, the h merely serving to indicate that the vowel preceding or following it is to be pronounced long; it has never the sound of the English th in with, thine, thin; in many cases where h is merely a sign of the length of the adjacent vowel the h is omitted by the new rules for orthography (as Muth now Mut, Theer now Teer).

v at the beginning or end of a syllable has the sound of f in fear, father, far; in the middle of a word, according to some authorities, it ought to approach more nearly to the sound of v in live, move, rove; in words borrowed from the French, v retains the sound of the French v; in words taken from other foreign tongues, it is pronounced by some with the hard sound of f, by others with the soft sound of v.

w has a sound closely resembling that of the English v in very; it is never mute before r and h as in the English words wren, wholesome; Ewer is pronounced as Euer.

x in all positions has the sound of ks.

ß ,, ,, ,, ,, ,, of ts in the English marts, colts etc.; ß is used for ßß and should be pronounced like t-tz (as ſetzen = set-tsen).

Of Accentuation.

Words, not monosyllabic, have their syllables either accented or unaccented; if two syllables in a word are accented, one receives the principal accent the other the secondary; if three, one receives the principal, another the secondary and the third a still lighter stress. The accentuation in German can present little difficulty to the English student since it is generally placed upon the most important syllable of a word and always upon the most important word in a sentence. Hence the rule. — The accent in simple words falls upon the radical syllable and in compounds upon the determinative component. Admirable as this generalization is, it appears to present difficulties to the young student which occasionally lead him into error, besides involving the acquisition of a very large number of exceptions.

Leaving out of consideration the case of monosyllables, about which there can be no doubt, the following rule may be found convenient for guidance —

A Practical Rule for Accentuation.

The principal accent rests on the first syllable in German words; whether simple or compound, except;

Excep. I. In words beginning with the (accentless) prefixes be, ge, ent, emp, er, ver, zer.

Excep. II. Words terminating in ei or ieren (ieren) have the principal accent on these syllables.

Excep. III. Verbs compounded with particles which form inseparable prefixes, have the principal accent on the root of the verb (as hinter-gehen, voll-ziehen). The same rule applies to most substantives and adjectives derived from these. In composition with adjectives and substantives (except the verbal substantives in ung which follow the verb from which they are derived) miß has the principal accent, but in composition with verbs is variously accented; thus, where miß precedes another prefix it retains the full accent (as mißbehagen, mißverſtehen); when, however, miß is compounded with simple verbs, the verb thus formed is accentuated according as it is a separable or inseparable combination, thus mißdeuten (pp. mißgedeutet, supine mißzudeuten) takes the principal accent on miß, but mißdeuten (pp. mißdeutet, supine zu mißdeuten) has the full accent on the second or radical syllable (as mißdeu'te). Verbal substantives in ung derived from these inseparable verbs have also the principal accent on the second syllable.

Excep. IV. Not the principal, but a secondary accent rests upon the first syllable when that syllable is un prefixed to adjectives (or to the abstract substantives derived from them) directly formed from verbs in bar, lich, ſam, (as unabwendbar, Unabwendbarkeit, unausſtehlich, unburchdringlich ꝛc.). But adjectives of this class which are not directly formed from verbs (and some that are — mentioned below) follow the general rule and take the principal accent on the 1st syllable; as.

Excep. V. urſprünglich and Urſprünglichkeit have the full accent sometimes upon the first syllable, sometimes upon the radical ſprung.

Excep. VI. The adjective offenbar has the full accent sometimes upon the first syllable, sometimes upon bar; offenbaren accents on the second component and only a very slight accent on the first (as herüber, hinfort, vorher; but äußerhalb, ünterhalb, ünterreinander, of which both components are not particles, are accentuated according to the general rule; words like bergäb, bergän must, however, be regarded as compound particles, though the first component is really a substantive; einmal has the full accent in some cases on the first syllable, in others on the second, the sense differing with the accentuation). When compound particles occur as separable prefixes to verbs, the principal accent of the word thus formed still remains on the second syllable (as zuſämmenſetzen, herünkommen).

Excep. VIII. The substantives Jahrhundert, Jahrtünft, the adjective jahrtünftig 2c.; substantives of direction, as Südoſt: the adjectives lebendig, wahrhaftig, handgreiflich, leibhaftig, vollkommen, halſamiſch, unzweifelhaft, vortrefflich, vorzüglich, willkommen, hochadelig, zufrieden and those compounded with "all" (as allmächtig, allweiſe, allgütig, allmählich) take the principal accent upon the second syllable; also the adverbs in composition with all, viel, voll, wohl (as allhier, alleln, vielleicht, wohlan, wohlauf).

Excep. IX. The verbs lobpreiſen, lobſingen have the full stress sometimes upon the first syllable, sometimes upon the radical.

Observation A. Prefixes the vowel of which is e (be, ge, ent, emp, er, ver, zer) are unaccented.

Observation B. All terminations (derivative or inflectional) of which the vowel is e (chen, be, e, el, eln, em, en, enb, er, ern, eſt, et, lel, ſte, te, tel, the), also the suffixes ig, zig, ſig are unaccented.

NB. Unaccented syllables accumulating in a word are to be uttered rapidly.

Observation C. Some verbs, having an unaccented prefix as first syllable, take another prefix before it which serves yet further to modify the meaning of the radical; this prefix has the principal accent (as ünterziehen).

Observation D. The particles durch, hinter, über, um, unter, voll and wieder in comp. with verbs receive the full stress or not according as they form sep. or insep. prefixes, the meaning of the verb being also modified by this circumstance (as dürchréiten and dürchreiten, überziehen and überziehen).

* The word particle is not used here in the same sense as that in which it is employed in the body of the Dictionary.

Multi-Compounds.

Compound words of which one or both components are themselves compounds are called Multi-Compounds. Each component of a Multi-compound receives the accent due to it separately, but the collective accents are subordinated to one another so that the principal accent falls on the principal component and the whole follows the rules given with regard to the accentuation of simple words or compounds; thus in Seeräubergeſchichte, See receives the chief accent, ſchicht the next, räub the third, while ge, er and te are unaccented; moreover, the first compound (Seeräuber) has a stronger accent than the second (geſchichte); in Nördſee-ſchiffahrt, Nordſee has a somewhat stronger accent than Schiffahrt; while Nord has the full accent, ſchiff the second, ſee and fahrt the least.

NB. But Pá'lmſonntág, Chá'rfréitág.

Accentuation of Foreign Words.

1. A number of words derived from the Latin and Greek tongues have been admitted into the German language at such an early period as to have become naturalised and subject to the same laws with regard to accentuation as the language into which they have been adopted.
2. Besides these, however, are many words derived from the same sources which, though regarded as naturalised, still retain their foreign form; these generally retain also their original accent, which in a large number of cases is on the last syllable; such are, Figür, Natür, Doktrin, civil, Juſtiz, Humanität, Manuäl, Natiön, Doktrin, Februar, Figur, Humanität, Juſtiz, Magiſträt, Mandät, Natiön, Natür, Patiënt, Patrön, Philoſophie, Planët, Prälät, Provinz, Religiön, religiös, ſubtil, Statüt, Studënt, Toleränz, Triümph, univerſäl, zivil 2c.
3. But words of this class do not always retain their original accent when not conforming to the laws of the German language, the accent in many cases being only by analogy, placed on the last syllable as barbär, Philoſóph 2c.
4. Some original German words with foreign terminations, also take the accent on the last syllable, as Soldät, Moräl, Schwadrön 2c.
5. In polysyllabic words with German terminations, the principal accent rests on the penult, as die Idylle, die Partikel, manierlich, harmoniſch.
6. Some substantives in ik have the full accent on the last syllable, others on the penult, as Muſik, Lörik, Lögik, Poëtik, Politik, Grammätik; also Metaphyſik and Metaphyſik, Mathemätik and Mathemaſik.
7. Words borrowed from modern languages are generally pronounced and accentuated as in the language from which they are borrowed.
8. The accentuation in many words is quite irregular as Theorie, Hiſtörie, Kanöne, Kánon, Barometer, Thermometer, Trimeter, Pentámeter, Altar and Altär.
9. In many foreign substantives the accent is transferred from one syllable to another when increased by inflection or derivation, as Dóktor, Doktören, Päſtor, Paſtören, Profeſſor, Profeſſören; Muſik, Muſiker, muſikäliſch, Muſikänt, Melodie, melödiſch; Natiön, nationäl; Äther, äthériſch.
